WASHINGTON CITY.

Opinion of the House Ways and Means Committee on the Phelps, Dodge & Co. Job—An Arrant Robbery and Ben Butler at the Bottom—of Course.

NEW YORK, March 6—The statement made by Mr Dodge of the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co to the Ways and Means Committee to-day made a deep impression upon those present and there was scarcely any dissent from the opinion that the treatment of the firm was wholly unjustifiable and little if any better than robbery. The Committee was thoroughly satisfied that the representations made to the Treasury Department by Jayne and his confederates, and upon which the Department acted, were false. The fact came out that Gen Butler acted with Jayne or for him and that he boasted while the case was in progress, that he had a single letter that would convict the firm in any court of competent jurisdiction. After Mr Boutwell left the Treasury, the firm felt that Butler had too much influence for them to face and they were partly badgered into payment and partly induced to make it to get rid of the annoyance. Dodge also said that other Congressmen besides Butler acted for Jayne in their case. The amount paid by the firm was $271,000 and of this Jayne received $[illegible].

STRANGLED TO DEATH.

Execution of the Murderer of Dwyer, the San Juan Island Settler—A Brutal Performance Enjoyed by Two Hundred Spectators.

SEATTLE March 6—The following dispatch has just been received, under date of Port Townsend March 6th

Joseph Huana alias Kanaka Joe, convicted at the last November term of the District Court for the murder of Dwyer on San Juan Island suffered the death penalty between 10 and 11 o'clock this morning A scaffold was erected yesterday on the beach below Point Hudson near the brewery, and quite a large crowd had gathered around it by 10 o'clock. A few minutes before ten the prisoner was brought out of jail by Sheriff Boyes of San Juan and Mayor Van Bokkelin Sheriff of Jefferson county He walked fearlessly with his hands in his coat pocket accompanied by Rev Father Mans to the place of execution Some two hundred spectators followed At the gallows Joe walked briskly up the step and stood on the platform in conference with Father Mans for several minutes He then took off his cap and said "I am very sorry for what I have done all hands good bye, and waved his cap to the crowd For a moment he showed signs of weakening, as his arms were being pinioned but soon recovered his composure He had requested that his hands should not be tied, and promised he would not move them if left unbound

The drop fell at five minutes past ten The rope being a large new one, the knot did not slip easily, but shifted under the chin leaving the strain on the back of the neck consequently the neck was not broken and for a few minutes the clenched hands and convulsions of the body showed that he suffered terribly Thirteen minutes after the drop fell Dr Bingham found the heart beating at sixty, but it soon stopped and in twenty minutes the doctor pronounced him dead Joe made a full confession last night He detailed all the circumstances of the Dwyer murder and confessed to killing Fuller in 1862

OLYMPIA CORRESPONDENCE

OLYMPIA W. T. March [illegible] 1874

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

But now [illegible] Olympia [illegible] There are however some pleasures and creature comfort compared with what the trip was two or three years [illegible] Kalama If you wish to be called too early in the morning you can find a good bed on the boat and at seven a good warm breakfast to eat and Arrived at Kalama we had time for a stroll about town The place improves slowly yet she is not dead The business of the town will very greatly increase when the [illegible] is built The people complain of the scarcity of money We peeped into every building we saw lying about to see if we could not find a roll of greenbacks [illegible] but not a greenback was to be seen

The country along the railroad is but little improved and in some places very rough There is plenty of good farming land along the route which needs only the hardy pioneer to bring under cultivation The cars which we found very comfortable, made good time and landed us safely at Tenino This junction city is in its incipient stage What it may become the wisest do not venture to predict The man who keeps the eating house furnished us some good refreshment and seemed particularly happy in supplying his customers We suggested that he was very jolly for a man so isolated from the busy haunts of life, but he protested that he had about him everything to make him contented and happy with one exception he needed a [illegible] partner Now here is a chance for some poor sewing girl or some faded lass from the [illegible] hills of [illegible] land

The stage ride to Olympia was [illegible] ant We put on our wraps and took a seat There were only two of us in the old "mud wagon"—not enough to give it ballast With so light a load the horses [illegible] As for our wraps, they soon found their way to the bottom of the wagon and it was with serious difficulty that we kept our [illegible] and boots on We learned that the trip could be made more comfortable by going on to Tacoma thence to Olympia by steamer

Olympia has a neat and cleanly look and although her people complain of dull times she shows [illegible] signs of decay The town has improved very much within the past three or four years but whether she will continue to improve is the important question Olympia has abundant resources but capital is needed

At the little suburban town of Tumwater there is extensive water power, which if properly utilized, would give employment to thousands of people Heavy forests of choice timber in the vicinity can easily be brought to the city for manufacture or shipped to foreign ports The Olympia and Tenino railroad will undoubtedly be built and will prove a great convenience to the people of this city and a source of profit to the stockholders. What impetus it will give to the business of this place it is difficult to estimate It will, undoubtedly be of some benefit Another road might be built out into and down the Chehalis Valley, which would be an important feeder to Olympia The wheat of that valley as well as that of the surrounding country, would be made into flour on the Tumwater—thence shipped to foreign ports. But Olympia as well as all other towns on the Sound can not expect a rapid growth until there is a larger immigration The last Legislature of this Territory were too stupid to take any step favoring immigration They seemed to have had no idea of developing the resources of the Territory—no idea of progress What they want is to be let alone Two years have been lost through their extreme inclinations to conservatism With another such a Legislature the people would have nothing to be surprised at after waking from a regular Rip Van Winkle sleep Should the work on the N P R R proceed the population of the Territory will increase and towns will grow in spite of Legislature and Olympia will stand her chance with the rest

PERSECUTION OF THE PRESS IN PARIS

The strangeness of the Government with regard to the press is bringing about a most curious state of things Everybody seems anxious to [illegible] a newspaper and the newspapers are beginning to lay their hands upon each other Even this is an improvement on the late system Yesterday one journal said that a contemporary was about to stop publication and suit was entered at once to see whether the credit of a paper could be attacked in this fashion One journalist having said that the Lyre subscription fund had not been properly distributed, M De Villeneuve prosecuted him and was [illegible] for his pains But the most curious affair is that of M Dennery author of a play called the [illegible] At one moment a director [illegible] offered by M D[illegible] who after having written a drama a quarter of a century ago [illegible] his talents to the work of [illegible] keeping. Rather hastily, perhaps, the piece was accepted, but the moment it was in rehearsal the [illegible] The actor [illegible] it and showed [illegible] stopped it and was prosecuted [illegible] author got judgment and the director was condemned to bring out the piece One can imagine the ridicule that was heaped upon it [illegible] made it as ridiculous as possible [illegible] Then M D[illegible] The law of 1822 in such cases made and provided says that a person attacked shall have the right of reply provided always that his reply does not exceed double the original [illegible] The critique was composed of [illegible] sent by the bailiff who ordered its insertion [illegible] will probably come up to-morrow—[illegible]

THE SCALES OF SERPENTS AS AIDS TO MOTION

Most persons have seen snakes glide [illegible] glass in a box in which was a common black snake [illegible] slightly and brought [illegible] scarcely to touch [illegible] opportunity to witness the way [illegible] the scales that [illegible] their elevation which runs from the head to the tail enabling the animal [illegible] minute pushes, as would occur if all the scales be lifted and depressed at once—[illegible]

PACIFIC UNIVERSITY

How is the Forest Grove Independent

EDITOR OREGONIAN [illegible] the institution that it is well to have considered just now and [illegible] which I would ask the privilege of presenting to the public through your columns [illegible] in order that it might furnish [illegible] education [illegible] It was hoped that standing independent [illegible] teachers sustained by the endowment it would gather around it the sympathy of all friends of Christian learning.

The Institution has been unsectarian [illegible] of the malevolent or the thoughtless [illegible] of the ignorant to charge us with [illegible] in matter of friends or of religious belief In spite of difficulties with fidelity it has plodded and labored for a liberal College education [illegible] all that could and would [illegible] this has raised the standard of general education in the State

Considering the circumstances in which it is placed a great success has been achieved all that could be reasonably expected

These circumstances ought to be considered Our sanguine expectations about the rapid growth of our State have never been realized There is not in Oregon one fourth the population necessary to sustain one College [illegible] unwisely as it seems to the writer [illegible] some law of human nature the people have started some six or eight Colleges which [illegible] whether by their merits or their pretensions [illegible] the education they ever get

Denominational feeling is strong enough to give schools [illegible] support independently of their merits

Under the operation of this law this Institution is left to the support of perhaps the weakest body numerically and pecuniarily in the State

This does not make the Institution any the less valuable to the community and State [illegible]

Perhaps in the Academical department we shall meet with a generous rivalry [illegible] there will be but little material for the College from year to year

In the English course the endowment gives [illegible] the score of our college course make Pacific University the peer of the old New England Colleges that is generally considered the best [illegible] And doing this is the necessary thing to secure success

It is a just [illegible] criticism that objects [illegible] drives away students It may do this in particular cases but it furnishes the only solid inducement [illegible] Forest Grove a place of residence for the education of their children It furnishes the only ground for expecting that students prepared elsewhere will come here to finish their studies It will surely bring students of higher aims and must have a tendency to bring students into the Academy if that department is as well manned in the future as it has been in past years

To truly popularize we must [illegible] up and not grade down

There will be schools enough in the State where students can pursue a [illegible] studies and after rattling around two or three years come out graduates Others can popularize in this way better than we can We shall not compete with others in this direction certainly [illegible]

Considering all things the Institution has prospered and if true to the same principles will prosper Neglecting them it will go down [illegible] and will certainly never see them increased

Let not our want of fine buildings be [illegible] We certainly should have neat and comfortable buildings for the use of instruction [illegible] and increasing collection [illegible] history [illegible] this improvement must be made [illegible] The person who expects [illegible] considerable amount can be raised on this coast for an institution reputed to be connected with the Congregational [illegible] when public sympathy runs so much in party channels [illegible] The community has been liberal [illegible] in the county and to some extent elsewhere [illegible] all can be done that should in reason [illegible] building [illegible] H M

At a meeting of teachers held at Aumsville Marion county February 28 they resolved that they approved of the action of the last session of our State Legislature in providing for a uniform system of text books for the use in common schools that they did not approve of the action of the Legislature in regard to the time allotted for introduction from the fact that it works a severe hardship on a large portion of the community in a pecuniary point of view that a gradual introduction would have been preferable that they heartily approve of the text books adopted with the exception of the Pacific Coast series of readers and spellers, believing that the introduction of said readers and spellers was not an improvement nor an equivalent for those used heretofore in our common schools

The Olympia Courier says "The Renton coal mines, on Black river, near Seattle now being opened preparatory to thorough work, give promise of great benefit to the vicinity and the country generally Messrs Wilson who are running the foundry here vigorously having given some of the coal a practical test and they are well qualified to do so pronounce it first class for steam purposes—at least thirty per cent better than that of the Seattle Coal and Transportation Company's mine and that is regarded as good

A [illegible] MYSTERY.—The Memphis Appeal says "Among the many visitors at the Confederate Relief Association ball at the Exposition last Thursday night was a certain little man who was accompanied by his wife and sister a beautiful young lady The latter was dressed in costume and owing to her many [illegible] agreeable sociable qualities had quite a number of admirers Time sped quickly by and the young lady became so much enthused that she begged her brother in law to let her remain longer As a nice young man promised to take her home at the proper hour the brother in law granted her request and then left with his wife for home The parlor lights were left burning and as the young lady did not return after the lapse of several hours [illegible] and brother in law became alarmed Hours passed by and day dawned but the young lady had not returned Since then her brother in law has searched in vain for one trace that might lead to her recovery The very fact that a young lady should disappear mysteriously from the sight of her friends and relatives in this city is enough to create some excitement and to cause no little comment It is whispered that this young lady being fatigued with dancing was [illegible] to drink a glass of wine Whether the wine was too strong for her nerves or drugged is not perhaps known She drank and was soon in the hands of the tempter who bore away his prize beyond the reach of her friends and kindred It is believed she is now somewhere in this city and there are vague rumors that a young man will be arrested to day for her abduction The young lady's parents reside in Shelby County and she is of excellent family is quite beautiful and was very much admired

The prosecuting counsel—five in all—have swallowed over £14,000 The defendant's counsel are paid miserably compared with the prosecution but the exact amount is not known Some of the witnesses for the prosecution received very large fees—one 1,000 another 700 and a third 700 Of course the [illegible] from Australia [illegible] and Club [illegible] were decreed [illegible] which [illegible] to be added up must reach close on £100,000

THE ISSUE

A New Haven paper says the only difference that can be discovered between the platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties is that each contains the old and never-to-be omitted resolution that its party is abundantly capable of managing the affairs of the country and is entitled to the confidence of the people. And it is said that even these distinguishing resolutions would utterly fail to enable the average reader to know to what the platform belonged if the respective party names were not mentioned. They both favor the protecting of all classes of citizens in the enjoyment of equal rights before the law. They both—of course—have planks praising foreign born citizens. They both express the highest appreciation of the patriotic soldiers of the Republic. They both breathe the desire for perfect union of feeling and sentiment with the people of the Southern States, and promise oblivion of past differences. They both, of course, "sympathize with oppressed peoples the world over who are struggling for liberty"—or words to that effect. They both—of course—believe in economy in the administration of public affairs and stoutly demand retrenchment. And they both prudently avoid attempting to make any point on the tariff question, as that is a rock on which either of the parties would be sure to split wide open if it were touched. And beyond this, neither of these authoritative declarations of party principles furnish any light as to the views entertained by the people who are supposed to have been represented in the respective conventions.

That is just the condition of parties throughout the country at this time. There will not be a single issue between the Democratic and Republican parties in Oregon in the campaign now about to be inaugurated in Oregon, upon a question of principle. They will take the same ground on every vital question now practically applicable to the condition of the State and nation. The usual catch-votes resolutions will be inserted in each platform (vox et preterea nihil), and it is probable each will declare in favor of such internal improvements by the general government as may be considered especially likely to capture the people of particular sections.

The real issue now should not be what party organization shall administer the government, but what men can be most safely trusted to carry into effect the recommendations and pledges common to both. This reduces it down to a question of men. When both candidates agree upon all the matters of interest to the voter, there need be no question except that of which candidate is likely to be most willing and capable when the time comes for action.

A PAIR OF BOGUS GOVERNMENTS.

Don Carlos, insurgent chieftain, is to be transformed into Charles, King of Spain, in a few days, if we may credit the dispatches. The coronation ceremony is to be celebrated in due form, just as soon as Bilboa capitulates. That is the one event that stands between the Don and the coveted crown. The fall of the beleaguered city is all that is waited for, and that may be expected to happen any day. And it is announced furthermore that as soon as the metamorphosis from human chieftain to divine king takes place, new royalty will at once proceed to surround itself with the usual accessories of a ministry with budgets and portfolios, according to the accepted idea of monarchy. It was hardly necessary for the king in posse to tell the world that as soon as he got to be a king in esse he would have a cabinet. All kings have them.

But what is the kingdom over which King Charles will reign? What will be its capital city, and where its territorial boundaries? Who will be his subjects? His capital will be migratory, his boundaries the van of his armies, his subjects—the future alone will tell. The ancient capital of Spain is the seat of another government, a sort of republican despotism swayed alternately by the rabble and the military. The sensible conservative republicans are helpless and voiceless. When the new king is crowned there will be two regencies in Spain, but no government. The Madrid regency, republican in name, is so in name only, and presents nothing to challenge the sympathies of the people of actual republics; the regency about to be erected at Bilboa promises little for lovers of consistent orderly liberty to hang their hopes upon. If however, Don Carlos shall succeed in making himself actual king of all Spain, and shall prove himself as sound in judgment as he is enterprising in spirit, as judicious a ruler as he is talented as a captain there will be no occasion for sorrow that he has put an end to the unhappy state of affairs which characterizes all attempts at civil government in Spain as at once farce and tragedy.

THE SMART-BUTLER RESOLUTION

Yesterday morning we referred to the bill brought forward by Mr Smart of New York and supported by General Butler on the subject of appointments on the civil list. The objection that the bill would open the floodgates of corruption even wider than they have been opened hitherto is patent upon the face of the proposition. No one can contemplate the subject for a moment without perceiving that it would introduce and make prominent in every congressional election an element that has hitherto been of comparatively small account and would render these elections personal contests not only for the office of Congressman but also for all the other Federal offices allotted to the district in which such election was held.

But this is not the only objection to the bill if indeed it is the greatest. A feature scarcely less objectionable is that in palpable violation of the intention and spirit of the constitution it takes away from the executive department of the Government functions of a purely executive nature and vests them in the legislative department. It is violative of the constitution and contrary to the genius of American institutions—unless the corruptions of the last few years are to be considered institutions. When one comes to examine the office of President of the United States closely, it is found that there is little left of it when it is stript of the appointing power. All or nearly all the other duties of the office might as well be devolved upon any other officer—the Secretary of State, of the Treasury, etc.—and the Government be thus vested in Congress and an Executive Council composed of the persons who perform the functions that now appertain to the cabinet officers. It would work much better in practice to leave the appointing power in the President's hands and transfer the veto of laws to the heads of the different departments to which the laws appertained respectively, if choice must be made between this mode of revolution and that proposed by this bill, for that is not to be spoken of as anything short of a revolution. The out and out abolition of the Presidency of the United States would scarcely be a more radical alteration of the form of government handed down to us by the fathers of the Republic.

It is not intelligent patriotism nor a clear appreciation of the nature of civil liberty that prompts the attempts of men calling themselves statesmen to urge such changes as this in the form of the Government. It appears so improbable as almost to be ridiculous to say that such men as those who are advocating this resolution do not comprehend the nature and functions of the various departments of the Government, or do not comprehend the spirit of its institutions; but to think such is indeed the truth, is to take the most charitable view of their conduct.

BOSTON PAPERS ON THE CONFIRMATION OF SIMMONS

William A Simmons, hitherto Supervisor of Internal Revenue for New England, is known in that part of the country as B F Butler's shrewdest most unscrupulous partisan. He is said to be the smartest ward politician in Massachusetts and his flagrant corruptions of voters in elections are quite as notorious in New England as the operations in that line of the Portland Custom House Ring are in Oregon. Three or four weeks ago Simmons was nominated by General Butler to be Collector of Customs at Boston and Charlestown. The announcement called out an indignant protest from the leading Republican papers of Boston, the Advertiser, the Journal and the Globe being particularly vehement. They related a good many ill flavored reminiscences of Simmons political life, which were intended to post General Grant on the character of the nominee. The Boston Board of Trade sent up a strong protest, and the merchants of Boston sent a delegation to Washington to remonstrate in person with the President. They represented that the nomination was made without the knowledge of all the Massachusetts delegation in House and Senate save Butler and Hooper, that as Representatives Pierce and Williams were members from Boston, both merchants and deeply interested in the appointment, it was hardly proper to ignore them altogether and consult only General Butler, whose district has no possible connection with Boston. If this delegation went wool-gathering it came back shorn. Simmons was confirmed in spite of petition, remonstrance and protest.

Readers of the OREGONIAN have learned through these columns much concerning the popular sentiment in Massachusetts with regard to this subject. Here are some expressions from two prominent Republican journals of Boston. The Journal of February 25th says:

The answer comes to us from Washington that we must have Butler and Butler men, whether we want them or not. The Republican party of Massachusetts will not stand the evil and disgrace sought to be—whether intended or not—inflicted upon us at Washington.

The staid old Advertiser, next to the Worcester Spy, the oldest newspaper in New England, is hardly less vigorous in its warning. It says:

This is an invasion of our rights for which no precedent will be found in the political history of this country—an outrage which cannot be many times repeated without destroying not only the political party which tolerates it but the harmony of the State as a surety.

If any one be inclined to wonder at these ominous utterances let him consider that B F Butler was the apologist for Credit Mobilier, the father and the champion of the back pay grab, senior partner in the Sanborn-Kelsey contract, and at the bottom of the blackmailing job by which (as the House Committee on Ways and Means affirms) the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co were robbed of $281 000.

"Mental aberration of the mind" is the term by which one of Judge Durell's friends gently [illegible] him down to the level of dead drunk. He inferred this from the way in which he (Durell) changed his position and opinions in a certain trial. Here is another bit of evidence as to Durell's drunkenness on the bench, which we quote from the mass of testimony taken by the Congressional Committee in New Orleans. The witness is Mr [illegible], Deputy Clerk in Durell's Court.

Q. Do you remember [illegible] controversy between Judge Durell and Judge Campbell? A. There was something of that sort.

Q. Do you remember what Judge Durell said to Judge Campbell? A. I do not remember.

Q. Was not the Judge tight that afternoon? A. He was a little excited.

Q. Was he not intoxicated? A. No sir, he was a little excited.

Q. Excited at what? A. His face was red.

Q. Was it your opinion that he had been drinking? A. It was my opinion that he had drank a little more than usual.

The call for a People's Convention in Yamhill county came to the [illegible] office with [illegible] attached. Owing to the lateness of the hour at which it was received and our crowded columns we have been unable to publish the names of the signers. We notice among them however [illegible] of Yamhill [illegible] the Lafayette [illegible]. The call speaks for itself.

Those mortals of either sex who have been [illegible] or telescoped by Cheney may as well burn their charts of life. Another house has been discovered. [illegible] of Hamilton College, New York, telegraphs that he has captured a new planet [illegible] hour [illegible] minutes [illegible] ascension plus [illegible] degrees [illegible] minutes [illegible] It is gratifying [illegible] motion is parallel. There is something inspiring in the thought.

A church council in Union Grove, Wis., has convicted Rev James Jones of not always handling the truth with sufficient carefulness to meet the demands of veracity. This is a shock from which the honored name of Jones will scarcely recover.

A CALL

TO THE TAX PAYERS AND LABORING MEN OF YAMHILL COUNTY

WHEREAS The best interests of laboring men of all classes have hitherto been wholly subverted and wantonly neglected by would-be friends [illegible] taxes have been levied and unjust legislation had which has invariably worked a hardship on laboring men everywhere, therefore be it

Resolved, That as laboring men we will come out and make a bold stand for freemen [illegible] and will exert [illegible] our [illegible] all efforts of designing tricksters and dishonest politicians to rid [illegible] this [illegible] game [illegible]

Resolved, That we have the moral courage to cut our [illegible] party and openly and earnestly contend for the rights of laboring men of all classes that we will [illegible] but [illegible] and that we will [illegible] and constitution of office seeker

THEREFORE, As laboring men we call upon the tax payers of Yamhill county irrespective of party (all who approve the principles enunciated herein) to meet at their respective places of holding elections on Thursday the 19th day of March at 1 o'clock P M to select delegates to attend a County Convention to be held at Lafayette on the 21st day of March 1874 at 10 o'clock A M to nominate suitable persons as candidates for the next June election—one delegate for every fifteen votes and one delegate for every fraction over eight votes, taking for a basis the vote cast for Wilson and Burnett.

POLK COUNTY PEOPLE'S CONVENTION

This convention met at Dallas yesterday and made its nominations in the most harmonious manner. The following excellent ticket has been put in the field and will command the vote of three fourths of old Polk on election day:

For Representatives, T J Butler, W C Brown; D Stump; County Judge, W Pruitt; County Clerk, W S Frink; Sheriff, J J Williams; Treasurer, L M May; Assessor, N Garwood; Commissioners, H Rowell, J D Smith; County School Superintendent, J F Campbell; Coroner, G W Goucher.

The following named persons were elected delegates to the Independent People's Convention to meet at Salem April 15th, which shows that Polk yields a hearty response to the patriotic call which was lately uttered by Douglas county: [illegible] I. Butler, D M Boone, J J Williams, James Tatom.

The material which has been selected by the independent voters of Douglas and Polk counties is of the very best and reliable class of men. Men of such standing will be nominated in every county of our State and the movement will be above fear and above reproach.—Salem Statesman, March 6th.

To actual occupants and for the purpose of actual occupation for one fourth of the purchase price paid down and the balance in three equal annual installments, the purchaser to execute his promissory notes to the Company for such deferred payment, payable in one two and three years drawing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum until maturity, after which to draw interest at the rate of one per cent per month; and the Company to execute to the purchaser a bond for a conveyance of the land purchased by Special Warranty Deed [illegible] payment of the notes.

The opening of these lands in the market affords an excellent opportunity to settlers to procure homesteads in one of the finest portions of the State, and of the most fertile lands upon the coast, access to it from the Willamette Valley by a good wagon road and convenient to the older settlements, reasonable in price and upon terms of payment within the reach of all.

FASHION NOTES.

The large Spanish comb is one of the most sought for articles of toilet this winter

Short sleeves for evening wear are universal but low neck waists are rarely seen except in the fashion books

Lace flounces are now used upon thin as upon thick fabrics Tulles and organdies are as frequently trimmed with Honiton or Mechlin as are satin and silks

An ugly fashion has been recently revived that of cutting the front hair so that it hangs like a fringe across the forehead It will, of course be universally followed

A New York bride recently startled New York fashionables by getting married in a mauve silk dress trimmed with velvet several shades darker a bonnet of the same velvet with a large ostrich feather of shaded mauve and a close-fitting jacket of mauve velvet trimmed with chinchilla fur

Three hundred years ago the hair was combed as it is to-day So when ladies talk of new styles they are ignorant of the fact that there are no new styles In the time of Henry the Second of France the hair was tortured up on the top of the head and allowed to fall in short curls or in one plait behind

Nothing brightens up a room better than antimacassars, with colored ribbons and these can be made with squares of muslin and broad satin ribbon These lace squares or antimacassars with alternate squares of satin of the same dimensions make very pretty table cover borders, with a narrow edge of coarse lace as a border

Ladies who own handsome straw bonnets and wish to wear them again next season, may restore them by washing them with soap and water and a hard brush Rinse in cold water and dry in the air Then to bleach it place it in a box in which a saucer of burning sulphur has been put, and cover it up, closing the box so that the fumes of the sulphur may have the desired effect

More diamonds are worn in St Petersburg than in any other city in the world The Ural mountains supply a greater amount than the authorities care to acknowledge, and the jewelers have a better assortment than is seen anywhere else A splendid diamond aigrette made in Moscow and worn at the Duke of Edinburgh s wedding, represented the graceful foliage of the Indian Yucca, in pale green frosted enamel on gold, with thirty one diamonds suspended on tiny wire from the sword like branches Long sprays of wheat with diamond settings and tiara and aigrettes of gorgeous beauty, are oftener met with in Russia than elsewhere in Europe

BUSINESS NOTICES.

For several weeks past Oliver Denniee the popular photographer has been industriously at work fitting up his new rooms He has studied the matter thoroughly, and to-day he can invite the public into what may be termed a model photograph gallery There is but one flight of stairs to climb, and there need be no grumbling on that account He proposes to furnish first-class work His former efforts are proof that he can do so Mr Denniee is one of a few who have went through two fires and he don t want any more Now is the accepted time Improve it by taking a sitting in his new and handsome gallery

Agreeable to promise we will speak at length about the " White House " This is the house formerly occupied by Mrs C Levy Messrs Lewis & Strauss her successors have adopted the above name for their handsome establishment The room has been thoroughly over hauled painted and renovated Everything wears an appearance of real comfort elegance and convenience The stock is large and will be augmented by new arrivals Mr Strauss departed on the last steamer with the intention of selecting from the best goods in the California market The departments are in competent hands and every attention will be paid to the wants of customers The millinery department is under the supervision of Mrs Hopkinson whose knowledge of the business is such as to warrant full satisfaction to those interested in the purchase of goods in that line There seems to be nothing wanting in the arrangements already effected The establishment is complete That it will become a popular resort for the fair sex none can doubt We can assure the ladies that their time can not be more pleasurably spent than at the White House We wish the proprietors success and hope to have occasion to again refer to the establishment at no distant day Observe their new and attractive announcement on second page

A Victim to Highly Waxed Floors.—In December last a young lady in this city with her betrothed went to a ball given in one of the fashionable halls in Boston As is the custom now the floor was highly polished or waxed During the evening while dancing in a waltz quadrille the young lady slipped and fell and the young man who accompanied her in his efforts to save her from falling, placed his hand on her side but also slipped at the same time When the young lady was placed on her feet she was unable to stand, and was carried from the ball room It appeared that the young man in his efforts to save her pierced her side with one of his fingers in such a manner as to cause faintness and intense pain She was conveyed home in a carriage, placed in bed and a physician sent for, who pronounced her seriously injured internally She never rose again from that bed, and only a few days since was borne to her last resting-place in Malden cemetery The floors in our ball rooms nowadays are as slippery as glass, and the practice of waxing them to such an extent as to endanger life should be discountenanced —Cambridge Press

SATURDAY MORNING MARCH [illegible] 1874

PIONEER JUSTICE IN OREGON

Oregon twenty years ago was yet an territory [illegible] Only a short time [illegible] her beautiful valleys [illegible] streams already blended [illegible] national poetry had reached the over[illegible] elements at the [illegible] established a small trading colony which [illegible] name at the mouth of the great river whose solitary grandeur had awakened [illegible] Douglass, the naturalist [illegible] had touched it among the [illegible] and Lewis and Clarke had stood and [illegible] world. When the question of boundary between Oregon and British North America [illegible] attracted attention to [illegible] extreme Western possession [illegible] here was another influence greatly instrumental in the settlement of the new territory and in moulding the character of its population. [illegible] the camp fires of the trappers and mountain men from the Yellowstone to the Arkansas the enchantments of the reputed [illegible] beyond the Rocky Mountains were a constant theme and the few who had courageously penetrated to its [illegible] crystal streams and beheld its wondrous beauty were regarded with a sort of envious [illegible] something the wonderful stories of Oregon and its beauty and fertility were occasionally related in the settlement along the Mississippi and its tributaries creating a feverish and unsettled longing. In 1850 the Government, wisely perceiving the importance of inducing emigration to our north western territory, offered a princely share of the public domain to all bona fide settlers in Oregon. The offer was tempting. Along the frontier line of the Mississippi States was echoed "land for the landless," and soon the plains heretofore dreaded as an almost impassable Sahara, were dotted with moving caravans pressing to the promised land. Therefore—drawn mainly from the border States and territories and composed largely of men whom civilization with irksome restraints and apparent encroachments on the liberty of the citizen had pushed to the verge of the wilderness—it is not surprising that the population of the young territory should be not only of a marked American character, but of a peculiar type of Americanism. These pioneers were brave people who accepted the the liberal offer of the Government and its consequent trial and hardship with all the pluck which characterized the frontiersmen. They had been in the advanced guard of progress; they had cleared the way for the settlement and development of the Mississippi Valley and were still willing to cleave new homes at the very outposts of our domain. While they brought with them their marked Western prejudices and their half nomadic habits they brought also their sturdy independence, and that keen sense of right and wrong inseparable from strong courageous natures that left its sterling impress upon every public act and record in Oregon's early history. Society in the young territory was by no means rude or unsettled. Inferior, perhaps in some of the refinements of the older communities it was superior in the absence of many things with which older communities were cursed and hampered. Life and property were comparatively safe. Wherever the territorial law extended, it was simple and effective in its operation. Where it did not through lack of judicial organization justice was reached by short cuts unobstructed by the complex machinery of modern law, unclouded by the perplexing and uncertain verbiage of legal lexicons. In such localities justice was administered by alcaldes elected by the people. Their jurisdiction was ample, their decisions were final, and the mandates of their courts were generally respected, but their acts were vigilantly scrutinized by those who invested them with official dignity. Consequently, the administration of this backwoods magistracy always subject to the powerful test of public opinion, was usually honest and just. Occasionally, however, bad men stole into office and under their extensive powers perpetrated wrongs that in the absence of any court of appeal were hardly redressible. Under such circumstances an episode occurred during the early history of the territory that illustrates this simple judicial system, and recalls vividly the stories of the just Caliph of Bagdad over which childhood has lingered with so much delight and admiration.

Prior to January, 1852 there were no county organizations south of Calapoolia Mountains—a range stretching from the Cascades to the Pacific and dividing western Oregon nearly midway between the Columbia and the California boundary,—and for nearly a year later no courts were held in that region other than those of the local alcaldes. In the summer of 1852 a rich and extensive discovery of gold on Jackson Creek, within half a mile of the present site of Jacksonville, had brought a large number of miners to that locality both from other portions of the territory and from California. At this time, justice was dispensed within the new district by an individual named Rogers, who had been elected prior to the gold discovery. Rogers was known as a man of stubborn willful nature and not credited either with discernment or honesty; but, hitherto his decisions involving no considerable amounts of property and not outrageously unjust, had passed unquestioned by the people. When, in the fall of 1852 the mining camp was at the full tide of prosperity, a complication arose between two mining partners involving a right to a mining claim and the settlement of a partnership, the adjudication of which was finally taken in hand by the people, and resulted in stripping a dishonest judge of his undeserved honors.

Two miners, named respectively Sprenger and Sims owned and worked in partnership a valuable mining claim on Jackson Creek, and, late in the fall Sims taking the partnership funds started for Portland to purchase a supply of provisions, leaving Sprenger at work in the claim. During his partner's absence Sprenger met with a serious accident which confined him to his cabin crippled and helpless. There was lack of woman's nursing in the wild mining regions but there was no lack of kindly, generous sympathy for the unfortunate among the rough miners, and Sprenger was nursed and cared for with all the proverbial humanity of this class of people. When Sims returned finding his partner likely to be a burden on him for the coming winter he at once ejected him from the cabin and took possession of the claim. Sprenger appealed to Alcalde Rogers for restitution, but appealed in vain. His suit was conducted with considerable skill by a fellow miner named Kinney. Every point of law, both territorial and local, were on his side, every principle of equity in his favor, but the pleadings of his advocate fell on the ears of a corrupt and unfeeling judge whose decree stripped him of every dollar of his worldly possessions. His counsel, suspecting the credibility of some of Sims' witnesses, and satisfied that the trial was as unfair as the decision unjust, demanded a new one, which was refused by the alcalde.

Poor Sprenger was almost in despair. He was a cripple dependent on public charity, his means entirely exhausted—cheated and robbed by the man who should have stood by him in his misfortunes. In his distress he sought the services of a neighboring miner named Prim who reported, was a lawyer but who, for the sake of avoiding annoyance in petty trials where the fees were not commensurate with the lawyer's services had kept his true calling a secret. Sprenger found the disciple of Blackstone in a tunnel vigorously swinging his pick among the muddy and dripping bowlders, looking more like a Cornish miner than an expounder of legal perplexities. Prim was disposed to disavow any knowledge of law for the sake of saving himself the [illegible] of a case, where under the circumstances defeat was certain, but his humanity overcame his diffidence, and moved by the recital of Sprenger's grievances he threw down his pick and espoused the injured man's cause as zealously as if expecting a generous fee. Kinney, the former counsel of Sprenger, was sought and a consultation entered upon. Every known point of the law bearing upon the case was discussed. Every familiar [illegible] or pretext likely to assist in obtaining a new trial was proposed and the [illegible] waxed more earnest upon each examination of the subject. All however to no purpose. The known obstinacy of the alcalde and his suspected collusion with Sims rose everlastingly before them, presenting an impassable barrier between them and justice. A protracted and exhaustive view of the case only left the attorneys less hopeful than ever—when Prim in a [illegible] soliloquy remarked: "If we only had a Court of Appeal sir!"

"Great God sir!" exclaimed Kinney, springing to his feet in a state of intense excitement. "Why did we not think of that before? We will have a Court of Appeal sir."

Prim did not understand him thinking he referred to a probable election and organization of the regular [illegible] and suggested [illegible] that their [illegible] would probably starve and reach the Court of Death before they would get it before an earthly tribunal.

"No sir," continued Kinney with increasing [illegible] "I say we will have a Court of Appeal within twenty-four hours. Who [illegible] the [illegible]? [illegible] people [illegible] we have the power [illegible] court we can make [illegible] to try and hang the one below it if necessary."

[illegible] the result of their [illegible] was dispatched to summon the boys [illegible] miners' [illegible] He [illegible] with [illegible] every [illegible] the [illegible] —an appeal to their sympathy and sense of justice. Never was [illegible] more potent. Never [illegible] than his simple appeal [illegible] in the early days [illegible] as successful as his [illegible] the boys threw down their tools and [illegible] a thousand strong, and in a [illegible] he [illegible] to open the court for the purpose of reversing his own judgment. Kinney at once sprang upon a stump, called the meeting to order and suggested the organization of a Court of Appeal and its investment with full power to review the proceedings of the court below. The proposition struck the popular chord, and the affirmative response that swelled up from the crowd which was now in ill mood for trifling almost drowned the speaker's voice. A gentleman named Hayden, a native of Connecticut known for his uprightness and probity was unanimously pointed to for the position of Chief Justice. In vain did Mr Hayden protest and decline the proffered honor; in vain did he modestly insist that he was ignorant of law and unwilling to bear so great a responsibility. The popular current was too strong. A wild yell of acclamation proclaimed him Judge of Appeal, investing him in a limited sphere, with a power as supreme [illegible] or sultan. The new justice did not wait for a formal certificate of election but proceeded with the organization of his court in a manner that showed him to be a man of no ordinary business capacity. A clerk and sheriff were at once appointed, a record opened on which was spread the extraordinary proceedings of the hour and when the court was in working order a habeas [illegible] issued commanding Alcalde Rogers to appear with the records of his court. The writ was disobeyed, the alcalde refusing to recognize the appellate powers of the new court. An unexpected complication having thus arisen the process was about to be enforced by the excited people when Justice Hayden, maintaining the dignity of his court amid the greatest uproar, solved the difficulty by ordering the parties in equity to appear before him for a new trial. Sims dared not disobey seeing that the dissolution of the high court would be the signal for popular violence, and securing the services of Orange Jacobs a young attorney from Michigan promptly responded and the trial at once went on. A venire was issued for a jury—twelve good and lawful men—subpœnas issued for witnesses and the case formally opened. Jacobs of whom little was known, except that he was recognized as a quiet, unassuming miner appeared with an able and apparently exhaustive argument protesting against and denying the extraordinary jurisdiction assumed by the court as contrary to the organic law of the territory, and therefore against public policy and revolutionary, and moved that the case be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. He pleaded as one wedded to his profession as an abstract science jealous of the law's infringement for its own sake, but he appealed to a judge who sat for the dispensation of justice more than for the vindication of law and as might have been expected, his motion was overruled. Prim and Kinney managed the case with the skill of veteran attorneys and in knowledge of the peculiar circumstances surrounding it overmatched their opponent who deftly and courageously met every argument and sifted every witness with all the shrewdness of a thorough legal expert. During a stubborn argument on a law point presented by Jacobs he became so earnest as to venture to bet a small sum that it was good law and supported by ample authority. Kinney sprung to his feet triumphantly; he knew the point at law but he knew his man and understood the composition of the jury. Drawing his buckskin with an air of the most supreme confidence he flung three of the old fashioned fifty-dollar slugs upon the table and demanded the amount of his opponent's bet. It was bluff against knowledge and bluff won. Jacobs was a recent immigrant without a color in his wallet, and responded not. There was an audible smile on the faces of the jury and the court with becoming gravity pronounced the point not well taken. Jacobs fought over every inch of ground and opposed every effort of Sprenger's joint counsel with a moral heroism that in the face of an angry and excited crowd of spectators was almost sublime but he was at a sad disadvantage in talking to a court and jury who did not care a fig for law when conflicting with their ideas of right and wrong.

The witnesses examined and the [illegible] made, Kinney presented the case to the jury. He dwelt on the right of every citizen to the peaceful possession of his property and on the duty every man owed to society in the protection of his neighbors' rights, but it was when he referred to the relations existing between the two men that crude human nature triumphed over legal science and skill. Drawing a distinction between partnerships in civilized communities and those in the wild mining region where the social amenities of life were uncommon, he showed the former to be mere commercial and financial connections among men, while the latter were ties of brotherhood sanctioned and [illegible] by custom, and imposing obligations than which there were none stronger. He told the jury that a man's partner was required to be his friend to sustain him in evil and in good repute, to share with him in health, to nurse him in sickness, to divide his last crust and last [illegible] with him and to stand by him when all others had deserted him. He summed up the evidence clearly and forcibly, showing the jury, who were becoming each moment more impatient to render their verdict, that Sims had disregarded his neighbor's rights, violated the common law of the region and robbed and abandoned—not Sprenger—but Sims' partner. It was then that decorum ceased, and the honest manhood of the rough crowd found vent in applauding cheers. The jury rose and swung their hats, forgetting the dignity of their position, while Justice Hayden with difficulty restored order, and informed them that the case was only half tried. It was now [illegible] turn. He rose, quiet and self possessed, conscious of a strong prejudice against himself and client and [illegible] objection that under other circumstances or before another tribunal would have been most formidable, but he forgot that he was talking law to a court sitting only for the purpose of doing equity, and [illegible] ears. The court charged the jury—[illegible] proceeding perhaps so far as their [illegible] the case was concerned but necessary to maintain the proper dignity of the court which would have been infringed had this important form been dispensed with. The charge was one that might be a model for higher courts. His Honor instructed the jury that they must strip the case of all the [illegible] with which Sims' counsel had surrounded it, regarding no law but that of right and wrong [illegible] testimony [illegible] dom fell to the ground. And then [illegible] At first, they experienced difficulties in their finding. Some of them were in favor of [illegible] others strictly [illegible] Rogers [illegible] One or two [illegible] of the court but the difficulty was solved by the permission of special instruction. [illegible] Kinney [illegible] overruled. Of course the verdict was for complainant [illegible] his reinstatement in possession of his claim, his half of the partnership property and an allowance of all charges during [illegible]. The decision was received with a deafening yell of applause, amid which the court adjourned. It was then that the [illegible] feeling of indignation against Rogers found vent. The evidence had [illegible] that official and his contemptuous non compliance with the order of the superior court could not be passed in silence. A low sullen murmur like the sweep of an approaching storm over a treeless prairie was heard. Knots of angry men gathered together. Louder and louder grew the tumult, till a fierce [illegible] was satisfied.

[illegible] of South[illegible] [illegible] before their exasperated mob and pleaded in behalf of the sacred principles of law, now occupies the position of Chief Justice of Washington Territory. Prim has been Chief Justice of Oregon and is now Associate Justice on the Supreme Bench of that State. Chief Justice Hayden has held the honorable place of Recorder for the principal town of Southern Oregon for nearly twenty consecutive years, having repeatedly refused higher honors, while Kinney has long since gone [illegible] in obedience to a [illegible] before a higher tribunal than all.

The day of the Pioneer is over. The star that he followed has reached its zenith and he can go no farther. We may now regard him as a soldier in the cause of human advancement whose battles have been fought and won, and he may well look back in surprise at the wonderful social and material results that have followed in his wake. The shifting sands of the desert have covered up his foot steps but the solid and substantial foundation laid by the Pioneer for the social structure of the Far West will be as lasting as [illegible] Separated by thousands of miles of lofty mountains and barren plains from the [illegible] and influences of civilization, these rough men in the early days established [illegible] ethics for the regulation of the social duties that was founded on the [illegible] principles of morality. Without written law they enforced justice and decided all questions relating to individual rights with that unerring judgment which springs from a keen discrimination between right and wrong and is worthy of the jurisprudence of the highest civilization.—Wm. We remark the fact that the State and municipal tax gatherers in Oregon this year are reporting collections with more promptness than for several years before and the delinquent list in most of the counties is comparatively small, all of which indicates the general supply of circulating medium to be above the average. Such a condition of affairs is accounted for by the large sums that have been disbursed for the agricultural products especially grain during the current season. From all reports the people at large throughout the State have more money and are nearer out of debt than ever before, which is certainly a matter of congratulation and indicative of the advantages which we possess over other sections of the United States where people are burdened with debt and in some instances suffering a want of actual necessities.

In our local finances there seems to be no change from the condition of general ease and occasional closeness noticed in our last review. The offers to loan in the aggregate are quite large and with greater laxity in rates the prospect is not at all discouraging to trade. The principal difficulty is the determination as to what investments under the present circumstances afford the strongest probability of margins. The shipping interests are not active owing to a general state of dullness in the markets which usually furnish a demand for our products as well as to the high price of tonnage. Hence, with a full supply of money we find that prices for our products are at a low figure and [illegible] trade are dull. Some of the surplus capital is being applied to the establishment of manufacturing enterprises in our State and the more rapid development of our mining and agricultural resources. But these are as yet in their infancy [illegible] confidence that they will yet place Oregon in the front rank of States in point of population and wealth.

A [illegible] from San Francisco informs us that the Bank of San Francisco was to be inaugurated on Monday March [illegible]. This bank departs from the ordinary routine of monetary institutions and will introduce new features which will commend themselves to the attention of the public.
